Living in another country helps you to become sensitive to other cultures, be more adaptable, and capable to think on your feet. I don’t think I’d have been selected for a Fulbright grant had it not been for the top quality education and faculty support I received at Marist and the skills and professional experiences I developed while studying abroad in Spain for 18 months.”*

Grants for Advanced Study

Marist College students have experienced increasing success in their applications for nationally competitive scholarships

The College is recognized as a top producer of Fulbright Grant recipients

Over the past eleven years, twenty Marist students have received Fulbright U.S. Student Program Grants to spend nine to eleven months abroad following graduation, either pursuing research or teaching English in another country. For the second consecutive year, Marist was recognized as a "Fulbright U.S. Student Program Top Producer" by the Institute of International Education. This recognition singles out U.S. institutions of higher education which have produced the greatest number of Fulbright Student Grant recipients in a given competition cycle. The distinction is published annually in The Chronicle of Higher Education.

Distinguished awards help to promote study of Science, Teaching, Study Abroad

In the last decade, four Marist students have been named Barry M. Goldwater Scholars for their undergraduate promise in scientific research; two students have received the National Science Foundation (NSF) Graduate Research Fellowship for doctoral study in the sciences; and one student was awarded the James Madison Memorial Fellowship supporting graduate studies for future secondary school teachers of U.S. History or government, and the sole recipient from New York State. Additionally, ten Marist students have received the Benjamin Gilman Scholarship for funding undergraduate studies abroad and a Marist sophomore was awarded the highly competitive U.S./U.K. Fulbright Summer Institute Grant to participate in a four-week summer intensive program at the University of Bristol.

Trend continues: eight Marist finalists for this year's Fulbright and Truman Awards

Academic scholarship continues to take center stage at Marist, with seven students advancing to finalist status in this year's Fulbright competition. Further, a Marist junior has been named a finalist in the nationally competitive Harry S. Truman Scholarship, which provides networking opportunities and support for graduate studies for future U.S. public policy "change agents."
